

Brown International Scholars Program (BISP)

“Conducting research in South Africa through the BISP was without a doubt one of the most exciting, challenging, and unforgettable experiences of my life--an experience that has directly shaped my academic interests and plans for the future. I am immensely grateful to have been given the opportunity.”

—Katie Gannet, BISP Fellow 2010

The Brown International Scholars Program (BISP) provides an opportunity for undergraduate students to make international studies an integral part of their Brown curriculum through research, public service or other student-designed experiences abroad. Each year, BISP fellows will receive up to $5,000 to pursue independent projects linking their academic interests with international experiences. The program creates an enhanced context for students to probe the challenges and opportunities of international engagement through reflection and dialogue with a community of scholars, faculty mentors and community leaders.
